PREVENTATIVES FOR GLADIOLA THRIP

As a preventative against thrip, which is so common with gladiolus, we highly recommend that all bulbs are treated before planting. On small lots of bulbs, use two tablespoons of Lysol to one gallon of water and immerse bulbs for six hours. On large lots use one pint of Creosol to 35 gallons of water and dip for six hours.

NURSEYMEN'S EXCHANGE, 938 HOWARD

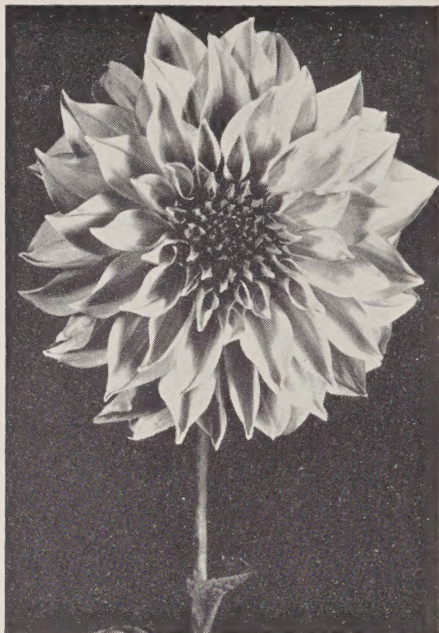

DDT can be used either in dust or spray form. As a dust the five per cent concentration is preferred, and best results are obtained when it is applied early in the morning while the plants are still moist.

The fifty per cent wettable powder can be used as a spray at the rate of two pounds per hundred gallons of water or three or four pounds of the twenty-five per cent can be used. Since gladiolus foliage is difficult to wet, a spreader-sticker should be added.

Although flowering spikes may just be developing, do not wait to get them protected against thrips. Much of the damage done occurs while the buds are still in the sheath.

Watch for signs of disease. Destroy those that show any signs of wilting, yellowing or streaking before the disease spreads through the rest of the planting.
